S&P 500 closes lower, posts longest losing streak since Oct; ASX to fall

 Global markets. The S&P 500 slipped for a fifth straight day on Thursday, registering its longest losing streak since last October.

The broad index lost 0.22% to 5,011.12, while the Nasdaq Composite dropped 0.52% to 15,601.50. The Dow Jones Industrial Average added 22.07 points, or 0.06%, to finish at 37,775.38, still closing just above its flatline for 2024.

Each day this week, the S&P 500 rallied into the green at one point during the trading session, only to give up that gain before the close.

With those declines, the S&P 500 and Nasdaq each notched their fifth straight down day. For the S&P 500, it is the first losing streak of that length since late October, just before the current bull market began. This is also the longest negative run for the Nasdaq since January.

The major indexes are also all poised to see losses this week. The S&P 500 has slid more than 2% so far in the week, while the Dow dipped 0.6% for the same period.

The moves come during what has been a difficult second quarter on Wall Street, with all three indexes down in April. That pullback has been driven in part by growing concerns around the path of inflation and monetary policy from the Federal Reserve.

Investors have followed the latest corporate earnings releases in what's shaping up to be a positive start for the season. More than 12% of S&P 500-listed companies have now reported, according to FactSet. Of those that have already posted results, 73% have surpassed Wall Street expectations for their individual performances.
